A Hebrew Bible theology of history is based on the understanding of history as a linear process, as directed to a goal (i.e., the Kingdom of God) and as qualified by the characteristic of singularity. This view of history contrasts with a cyclical understanding of successive events—i.e., the view that history repeats itself. Theology - Relationship to philosophy | Britannica The notion of theology as the study or contemplation (theoria) of the highest form of reality became commonplace in the Hellenistic philosophy of the Roman world in which Christianity emerged. In that world, the quest for God acquired for many people—including both Christians and non-Christians—a certain urgency, in part because of the recognized inadequacy of the traditional pagan religions and the social and political turmoil of the era. Theology - Functions of theology | Britannica The relationship between theology and philosophy has been long-debated and discussed with the Christian tradition. Tertullian, an influential early Christian theologian and apologist, believed that philosophy has little to do with theology, arguing that the use of philosophy often corrupted theology, leading to unorthodox beliefs that were not grounded in the early Christian tradition.
